

Diana Castro Sandoval (Spanish nationality) is a professional with multiple experiences within health sector. She has a dentistry background and further graduated from her master in International Health and Social Management which was developed between Innsbruck and Bangkok.

She has been working in several NGOs in Mexico and Guatemala within the area of cooperation and development right after she started her internship at United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) within the regional office in Bangkok. There she joined the health economics department and was working on the development on sexual reproductive health within the UHC framework in South East Asia.

She joined the EFPC as a Junior coordinator where she will be supporting and managing the activities that the forum develops, including dissemination and advocacy for the forum, organization of meetings and conferences ,developing strategic partnerships and so on. Nowadays, she is also a Committee Member at the European Health Parliament which it's a platform of young professionals from across Europe, who work together with the aim of shaping the future of healthcare in Europe.